

Each month, a third-grade class at Hoover Elementary School in Wisconsin, USA, creates a podcast. Through the podcast, students have interviewed many guests from all walks of life, such as a school leader, a weather expert and a magazine worker. It helps students learn more about the world and discover different possibilities for their future.

Their teacher, Caitlin Supple, started the project two years ago. She wanted her students to learn in a more creative way. Eleanor, one of Supple's former students, is now in fourth grade. She shared that working on the podcast with her class last year gave her a new way of learning. "From making the podcast, I've learnt that learning is more than just writing down notes," she said.

Supple's class reads Scholastic News, a magazine for young students, every Friday. The students work in pairs and read together. While reading, they often get cool ideas for their podcasts. "They're really interested in a lot of things, and they want to see kids like them doing cool things," Supple said.

Creating the podcast has brought many positive changes to the students. Even the quietest students are becoming more confident and can share their ideas more freely. Supple appreciates the way the podcast has helped expand how her students learn. "It has really inspired a love of learning. The students now love to work together to plan topics, come up with scripts and prepare interview questions. They are eager to explore different career choices," Supple said.

Through reading and podcasting, the students develop curiosity and creativity. They not only improve their teamwork and communication skills, but also broaden their horizons.

What makes a great friend?

Some people find it easier to make and keep friends, while others wish they had closer friendships or wonder why a friendship didn't work out. In fact, to build strong, lasting friendships, there are some important characters we should work on developing.

Quiz: What kind of friend are you?

1. I am trustworthy.
2. I am honest with others.
3. I am generally very dependable.
4. I am loyal to the people I care about.
5. I am easily able to trust others.

Teens share: What's the most important character in a friend?

Howie Lin, 15

"In my opinion, humour is a must-have quality in a friend. Having a friend with a good sense of humour is like having a personal talk-show artist on call 24/7. I have a friend who always comes up with creative jokes. With him around, even the saddest days feel better."

Jasmine Cao, 13

"The most important thing I look for in a friend is having similar interests or hobbies to mine. We may have a lot of fun memories together. For example, if we both love playing basketball, we can practise together, cheer each other up during games and help each other improve. A true friend is someone who not only enjoys the same things as you but also stands by you, no matter what."

Claire Tan, 11

"A true friend is important because he or she will be honest with you. If you do something wrong, true friends will point that out right away and believe that you can do better. However, fake ones will only talk about it behind your back. When you get hurt, true friends will care for you and comfort you from the bottom of their hearts. Fake friends may ask if you're fine, but they don't really care and will just walk away."

第二节 回答问题

学校将举办“倾听的力量”主题分享会,通过讲述美国一位小学老师设立“我希望老师知道”信箱的故事,引导同学们用恰当的方式解决自身烦恼与关心他人。请从下面短文中提炼一些关键信息,为本次分享会的介绍做准备。

Dawnell Ticanich, or Miss T, is a teacher at Fielding Elementary School in Utah, USA. She has a fun way of connecting with her students. In her classroom, she set up an "I wish my teacher knew" mailbox so that students could share their feelings with her.

Students can write to Miss T about anything—good or bad—and put their notes in the mailbox. Miss T checks the mailbox every day at 9:45 a.m. during her break and at the end of the school day. This helps the students talk about their feelings without having to say them out loud.

Sometimes, the students just leave sweet notes. One student drew a picture of Miss T, which made her cry happy tears. Other times, the notes talk about problems. One student wrote, "Everyone is making fun of my backpack." Miss T used this note to talk to the whole class about bullying. She shared her own stories of times when she felt bullied and helped everyone understand how to be kind. Another student wrote that he wanted to sit with some boys, but no one wanted to sit with him. This made Miss T realize some kids felt left out. So she changed the seating plans and taught lessons about friendship. Now, everyone feels included in her class.

Miss T loves reading the notes from her students and encourages other teachers to care for and connect with their students. She shared her idea online. Her video has been watched millions of times and has received thousands of likes. "You are an amazing teacher. Your students are so lucky to have you," one person commented online.

6. Why did Miss T set up a special mailbox?

7. How often does Miss T check the mailbox?

8. What made Miss T cry happy tears?

9. What did Miss T do after realizing some kids felt left out?

10. What influence does Miss T have on other teachers?

通过本次分享会,同学们增进了对倾听与沟通方式的了解。同时,如何关心他人也获得了更多同学的关注!

Arizona felt a mix of emotions when her best friend, Lily, made the top football team. She had tried out for the team as well but 1 failed. "I'm truly happy for Lily," she thought on her way home, staying 2. However, a sad voice inside asked, "Why can't I be that good too?"

The next day, Lily showed up at Arizona's swim practice. Trying to be 3, Lily pretended to kick a ball near the pool and accidentally fell into the water! Arizona 4 so hard that she nearly fell into it too. Seeing Lily's embarrassed face, Arizona quickly explained, "I'm not laughing at your 5, just your crazy hair!"

Later, Lily was invited to join Arizona's swim team for a race. Arizona 6 easily, while Lily finished last though she tried her best.

After the practice, Arizona finally told Lily how she felt. "I was a little 7 when you made the top football team," she said quietly. "I wanted to be on it too."

Lily nodded with a smile. "I get it. But you're so fast in the pool! I 8 like a chicken in it, remember?" She started dancing like a chicken, and Arizona couldn't help laughing.

Afterwards, they understood it was OK to feel both happy and jealous at the same time. Arizona promised to 9 Lily at her first big football game, and Lily said she'd come to Arizona's swim practices too. Whenever they were under 10 or felt down, they'd do their silly chicken dance. It was their way of saying that even if they weren't perfect at everything, they were perfect for each other as friends.

In April, a simple but touching activity at Tianjin University's library became popular across Chinese social media. Held during the university's "Begonia Season" Campus Open Day, the event was called "Life Confusion, Quick Q & A". 1

On a message board in the library, university students left notes asking questions about life. The answers often came from primary school students and secondary school students visiting the university. 2

A child replied with timeless wisdom, "Enjoy the present moment." Another university student asked, "What should I do if I cannot find happiness?" A kid's playful yet insightful answer was, "Watch Poppa Pig".

3 A secondary school student, struggling (斗争) with study pressure, asked, "How can I make maths and physics like me?" A university student responded with gentle advice, "Many things are reciprocal (相互的). 4" Similarly, a young visitor asked, "How do I get into Tianjin University?" A primary school student confidently answered, "I just walked in on Open Day!" It was a response that sparked both laughter and deep reflection.

Beyond the humour, these honest exchanges offered a cure (疗法) for the "meaning anxiety" of adulthood. As one netizen commented, "I hope the kids grow up slowly, and the older ones stay happy." Many people realized difficult problems in life become easy when seen through a child's eyes. 5

- A. Try being kinder to them first.
B. This proved that happiness is often found in simplicity.
C. One university student wrote, "How can I grow up more slowly?"
D. It turned a quiet corner of the library into a place for cross-age connection.
E. The message board also bridged the gap between teenagers and university students.
